RE: Florida Energy Choice Ballot Amendment

Dear Attorney General Moody:

We appreciate your efforts in opposing the proposed amendment “Right to Competitive Energy Market for Customers of Investor-Owned Utilities; Allowing Energy Choice” as we believe this amendment dismantles the reliability of the bulk-power system that the Federal Government through the Department of Energy is charged with protecting.¹ Under the guise of providing choice to consumers of electricity, the amendment forces the Florida Legislature to deregulate Florida’s energy market without requiring a reliable alternative for consumers and is damaging for our state’s progress toward clean energy.

This amendment threatens complete energy deregulation, which would create a middleman and allow third parties to come between consumers and power providers, ultimately increasing energy costs for Floridians. If passed, consumers could also be denied electric service or required to pay large deposits to receive service. Seniors and communities of color are typically affected at a higher rate than other consumers in unregulated electric markets.

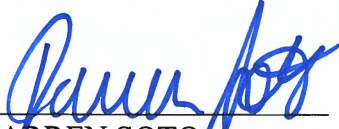

Not only do energy deregulated states pay more for power, they also have less reliability. Following deregulation, states have experienced power blackouts for extended periods of time with forced outages to reserve power for critical facilities, including hospitals and water treatment plants, as well as other critical public facilities. In a state prone to hurricane disasters, Florida consumers must have a reliable energy market.

Even those who see alternative ways to provide electricity to Floridians are opposed to complete deregulation. They believe it would be damaging to our state’s progress toward clean energy and solar development. The amendment’s passage would likely result in years of delay in solar energy development. We cannot allow Florida’s energy market to be disrupted by special interests rather than the interest of the public.

We, as Members of the Congressional delegation of Florida, encourage you to continue to fight against this ballot initiative that we believe will harm Floridians.

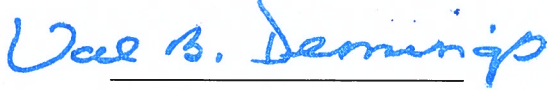

Sincerely,
